Official Word: What's A Committee?

THE Defense Department, obviously moving to eliminate doubt and confusion, has made known precisely and officially just what a committee is. The word is given in DoD 5105.18. It says: "A Committee is a body of persons with a collective responsibility appointed to consider, investigate, advise or take action and usually to report."

The Directive continues: "The prime characteristic, however, is the corporate or collective responsibility. The term 'committee,' as used in this directive applies to any committee, council, board, panel, commission, and any other group having a collective responsibility which is formally established by charter, directive, exchange

Rep. Moss Reveals Preface To General Power's Book; SecDef Is Questioned

(Senator Symington Protests Ban, Page 28)

THE controversy over Secretary of Defense McElroy's action in banning publication of a book by General Thomas S. Power, Commander-in-Chief of the Strategic Air Command, is headed for a Congressional inquiry involving public hearings unless the Pentagon provides satisfactory answers to a new series of stinging questions from Capitol Hill. As Senator Stuart Symington (D-Mo.), a former Secretary of the Air Force, assailed the Pentagon decision to bar General Power's book, "Design For Survival," on one side of the Capitol, Representative John E. Moss (D-Calif.), opened up a new line of attack against Secretary

SINGLE PROMOTION LIST:

Congress Hears New Demands For Service Merger; Two Unification Studies Asked

Two major proposals for further unification of the Armed Forces have been launched on Capitol Hill.

One plan, recommended by the House Committee on Government Operations, calls for a merger of the Army and Air Force and "ultimately, if weapon logic dictates, a single service in place of three."

The other blueprint, drafted by Senator Clair Engle (D-Calif.), proposes a comprehensive shake-up of the entire Defense Department — including establishment of a single promotion list for all officers.

Both Senator Engle and the House Committee gave strong support to new budget procedures recommended by former Army Chief of Staff, General Maxwell D. Taylor (THE JOURNAL, 4 April). The Committee said the present budget process clothes the "functional" demands of weapon systems and missions in "a vertical straitjacket."

Senator Engle called for a broad Armed Services Committee study to reorganize the military establishment "on the basis of functions and missions." His plan would do away with the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps as separate entities and establish in their place at least four, possibly more, new structures: a retaliatory striking force, a limited war force, a continental defense force and a logistic command.

Following the same basic line of reasoning, the Government Operations Committee said "the logic of new weapon technology has virtually destroyed the traditional basis for Services organized around strategic land, sea and air missions."

This is "particularly true," the Committee said, "of the Army and the Air Force, since land-based strategic missiles, whether organized in squadrons or battalions, require technical capabilities that

House Group Pinpoints Its Views

THE conclusions of the House Government Operations Committee, in recommending merger of the Army and Air Force, were summarized in the Committee's report as follows:

"In making its study of missile organization and management, the subcommittee did not intend to consider the whole range of problems involved in military Service unification. However, as the study proceeded, it became increasingly plain that the strategy of land-based missile power cannot be divided into the conventional concepts of land or air combat.

"From the vantage point of the missile studies presented in this report, the subcommittee concludes that the more moderate and useful approach at this time would be to consider appropriate means for bringing the entire Army and Air Force missile effort together. Weapon technology and strategic requirements point strongly in this direction. The recent and current interservice turmoil at Department of Defense and lower military levels supports the view that merger of the missile effort cannot be achieved short of a merger of the Air Force and the Army.

"The subcommittee recognizes that many preparatory studies would have to be

Hébert Group Ends Hearings; Will Report In January; Former CNO Final Witness

THE Hébert Special Investigations Subcommittee wrapped up its hearings in to the employment of retired officers by Defense Industries on 1 September, and launched final staff studies preparatory to issuing a report of its findings.

Chairman F. Edward Hébert said it can be expected that the committee will recommend legislation. Both the report and the draft legislation will be ready for the early consideration of Congress next year.

Final witness before the committee was Admiral William M. Fechteler, USN-Ret., now employed as Consultant for Long

The former Chief of Naval Operations told the committee he thinks any attempt to influence the award of Navy contracts

Gyroscope Spins In; New Rotation Plan

The Army is writing Operation Gyroscope off its books for Europe, and is modifying the replacement system for Korea.

Widely heralded at the time of its announcement in 1954 and put into effect in 1955 with much fanfare, Gyroscope called for unit rotation to Europe of divisions and smaller organizations.

In 1958, Gyroscope of divisions to Europe was abandoned in favor of rotation by battle groups.

Now, it has been decided that future

Navy Board Chooses Only 37% In Zone; Two Atomic Skippers Win Four Stripes

A Navy selection board, overturning all recent precedents, has chosen over 24% of 400 line captains selectees from outside the regular promotion zone.

The Board, headed by VAdm. W. L. Rees, selected 77 commanders from above, 20 from below, and 303 from within the zone.

There were 813 commanders within the zone. This means that 413 were passed over for the first time.

Records maintained by THE JOURNAL

indicate that the 77 officers selected from above the zone are the largest number in this category for at least the past 10 fiscal years. They constitute over three times the above-the-zone selections of the runner-up year 1956, when 22 previously passed over commanders were selected for captain.

Of the officers within the zone, the percentage selected was 37.3, the lowest in the past 10 years.

In making below-the-zone selections, the board reached down 1,714 names to the Air Force gave a green light to the SAC Commander's volume, and in fact recommended that it be published.

This confirms the disclosure in the 22 August issue of THE JOURNAL that the decision to bar publication of the book was made by Secretary McElroy, presumably with the counsel of Assistant Secretary Snyder.

The Moss letter, among other questions, seeks to learn whether the Pentagon has yet advised General Power in an official communication as to the fate of his book.

Since the book was submitted through official channels, seemingly an answer should be provided in the same manner.

NEW TYPE OF RADIOPLANE PARACHUTE AN INTEGRAL PART OF NASA'S PLAN FOR RECOVERING FIRST MAN IN SPACE

The leader in the development, testing and manufacture of recovery systems—Radioplane—was selected by McDonnell Aircraft Corp. to join the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Project Mercury.

Today Radioplane is readying the capsule landing system. For the project, Radioplane will use the new Ringsail parachute—a parachute with two radical departures from conventional Ringslot style. For a new kind of performance, Radioplane designed the new crescent-shape-slot parachute. The Ringsail withstands and reduces by as much as 35%, parachute opening shock at high-speed deployment. Drag coefficient and inherent stability are increased.

To solve the problem of aerodynamic heat without loss of strength, Radioplane is presently developing a high-temperature-tolerant fabric for drag devices. This landing system for Project Mercury exemplifies Radioplane's unique capabilities. Scientists and engineers in Radioplane's Paradyamics Group combine their experience in the recovery field with the newest in equipment to develop systems with the highest degree of reliability. They are continually solving the increasingly complex recovery problems of the space age—producing the most efficient answers—at minimum cost.

Congress Sets Final Action On Air Force Promotion Plan And Two Other Measures

THE Senate Armed Services Committee was expected to stamp its approval this week on House-passed emergency Air Force legislation authorizing 3,000 additional promotions to major for active duty Reserve officers.

With adjournment rapidly approaching, the $3 million Air Force measure probably will be the last major military bill to be acted upon during the current session.

Two other measures which also will see last-minute action are HR 6269, authorizing RIF payments totalling about $950,000 for 730 warrant officers, and legislation to authorize the restoration of Lt. Gen. Elwood R. "Pete" Quesada to the Air Force retired list.

The RIF bill, already approved by the House, affects a group of warrant officers who were serving in the AUS at the time they were RIF'd and who were barred, unintentionally, from collecting readjustment pay which went to other Reservists forced off active duty. It was expected to be favorably reported by the Senate Armed Services Committee as THE JOURNAL went to press.

The Quesada bill, approved by the Senate last month, has been favorably reported by the House Armed Services Committee and is expected to win final passage and go to the White House within the next few days.

Rep. Moss Questions SecDef On Banning Of General's Book

Representative Moss to Secretary McElroy:
September 2, 1959

Honorable Nell H. McElroy
Secretary of Defense
Department of Defense
The Pentagon
Washington 25, D. C.

Dear Mr. Secretary:

On August 21, 1959 the press reported that the Defense Department had banned publication of a book entitled "Design for Survival" by General Thomas S. Power, Commander in Chief of the Strategic Air Command.

So far neither Air Force officials who submitted manuscript through channels for Defense Department approval nor General Power has received the courtesy of a written notification of the Department's action. The only notification has been an informal announcement through the Department's Office of Public Information stating:

"Approval to publish at this time was denied on the grounds that it was inappropriate for a commander of a major command to author a book concerning his area of responsibility while on active duty in that command."

In a later clarification, the Office of Public Information stated:

"General Power has approval to discuss anything he wants to in public speeches and radio and television appearances and through various official publications."

The Subcommittee's initial investigation discloses that the manuscript of "Design for Survival" was first transmitted on April 21, 1959 for Defense Department approval to the Office of Security Review under Murray Snyder, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Public Affairs. Before the manuscript was submitted to OSR it was reviewed within the Air Force headquarters for military security and sensitive areas. Air Force officials who approved the manuscript after recommending security changes include the Assistant Chief of Staff for Guided Missiles, the Air Force Historian and the Deputy Chiefs of Staff for Materiel, Plans and Programs and Operations and Intelligence.

The manuscript was returned from Assistant Secretary Snyder's office and a number of revisions were made. The manuscript was again sent to Assistant Secretary Snyder on July 2, 1959, this time accompanied by a comprehensive memorandum from Under Secretary of the Air Force Malcolm A. McIntyre. Commenting on the manuscript for "Design for Survival," the memorandum stated:

"The material used is from open sources, available to the press, and existing in printed public form or cleared Congressional testimony. Much of it has appeared in speeches given by General Power, General White and other top civilian and military leaders on past occasions. . . ."

"The Department of the Air Force considers the opinions and views in this manuscript to be strictly those of the author, and in no way should be construed to state official Air Force or DOD policies. Air Force clearance of this manuscript is given in the interest of allowing professional airmen to express constructively and logically their professional views and ideas as a contribution to military science, thought, and literature. This is in accord with past Department of Defense policy and instructions on this matter."

As a result of further comments on the manuscript, transmitted verbally from Assistant Secretary Snyder's office, the matter was taken up with Air Force Secretary

James H. Douglas and again transmitted for Defense Department approval.

The Subcommittee's initial investigation indicates the Defense Department Directive upon which the banning of "Design for Survival" was based is DOD 5230.9. In addition, a "policy statement" resulting from an April, 1954 meeting of the Joint Secretaries with former Defense Secretary Charles E. Wilson has been cited. Defense Department officials have admitted that the "policy statement" controlling the writing of books and magazine articles by top civilian and military officials has never been put into writing.

DOD 5230.9, the only written directive controlling literary efforts by Defense Department personnel, is the old "constructive contribution" directive which was amended on August 17, 1957 after the Subcommittee held hearings on abuse of the requirement that information from the Pentagon must make a "constructive contribution." The objectionable phrase was replaced by a requirement that information must not "conflict with established policies or programs of the Department of Defense, or those of the National Government."

Whether or not there is agreement with the ideas expressed in "Design for Survival," it seems imperative that the American public should have access to those ideas in book form—particularly when the comments already have been made in public speeches and testimony. The basic American principle involved was set forth clearly in the preface to "Design for Survival" where General Power explains the manuscript was written because of "a growing awareness among the public that the military problems of survival are no longer the sole concern of the men in uniform and their civilian superiors." General Power's preface adds:

"It was most encouraging to find so much real interest because I maintain that our citizens have not only the right but the urgent need to know the full truth about the problems that are of such vital importance to them. Indeed, I am more concerned about any attempt to keep unpleasant facts from the people than about their reaction to these facts. It has been my experience that the average American is not easily frightened nor discouraged and that, once he knows what is expected of him, no one and nothing can stop him."

"In my discussions, I have endeavored always to present the facts as I knew them, frankly and in terms anyone could understand. To do so on a broader and more inclusive scale is the purpose of this book. It is, therefore, intended neither as a text book nor as a vehicle for advancing startling new ideas and theories. It is intended mainly as a report to our stockholders—some 175 million of them."

"... I decided to write this book because I sincerely believe that there is a need for it. To be sure, there is already an extensive literature of thorough and thought-provoking studies on every facet of nuclear strategy and policy. But this book was not written for the military or political scientist; it was written for the American people. It was written for them in the conviction that we cannot solve the problems entailed in our design for survival unless the people fully understand these problems and decide to do something about them."

"This country has had problems before, and it has always managed to cope with them once it gained the understanding and support of its citizens. Still, none of the dangers we have faced in the past can compare to the formidable threat of nuclear aggression which we are facing today. Nor will we ever again have the time to plan, to rally and to act after the aggressor has struck. If he were to strike today, he would find

"Dual" Pay Laws Hit NATO Staff

Dual compensation restrictions have hit the NATO Staff.

In a new ruling, B-140000, Assistant Comptroller General Frank H. Weitzel told Secretary of Defense McElroy that retired U. S. military officers are subject to the restrictions in the Economy Act of 1932 when they work for NATO.

The ruling specifically barred a disability retired Regular officer from collecting his retired pay. It cited Economy Act provisions which force him to forfeit all amounts of retired pay which, when combined with his civilian salary, would exceed a combined total of $10,000 per year.

Mr. Weitzel pointed out that U. S. nationals on the NATO International Staff are technically State Department employees and are paid from U. S. funds.

us ready to strike back but ill prepared to ward his blow."

In view of the imperative problems involved in the Defense Department's action banning publication of the book, "Design for Survival," an immediate and complete explanation of the action will be appreciated. In addition, please provide comprehensive answers to the following questions:

1. Will General Power and Air Force headquarters be notified formally, in writing, of the Defense Department refusal to permit publication of "Design for Survival?"

2. Section III of DOD 5230.9 states that public "access shall be limited only by restrictions imposed in the national interest pursuant to law?" What specific law is relied upon to impose restrictions on the publication of "Design for Survival?"

3. Was publication of "Design for Survival" prohibited because of "conflict with established policies or programs" as set forth in DOD 5230.9?

4. What authority does the Department rely on, in addition to statutory authority, for the refusal to permit publication of "Design for Survival?"

5. Was the publication of "Design for Survival" prohibited because of military security considerations?

6. Is the "policy statement" developed in the April, 1954 meeting of the Joint Secretaries in effect? If so, please provide copies of the statement.

7. Was "Design for Survival" banned with your specific approval?

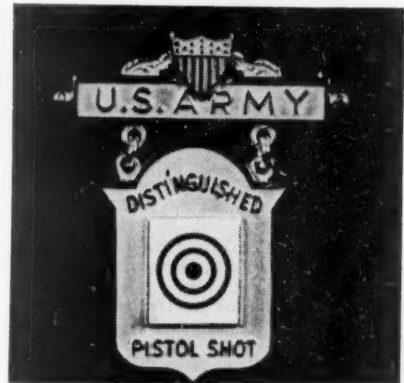

8. Did you review the manuscript personally?

9. Was the manuscript reviewed by representatives or officials of either the Army or the Navy or any agency outside the Department of Defense after its submission to the Department? If so, which departments or agencies reviewed the manuscript?

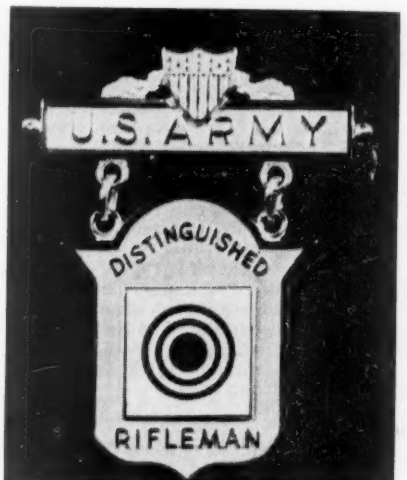

10. Does Defense Department policy permit officials of one of the military services to review manuscripts, speeches, articles, etc. prepared by other military services for publication?

Retired Group Says Comptroller General Should Have No Say In Records Correction

The Retired Officers Association is striving to protect the authority of the Services to correct the military records of their members.

The authority, exercised by the Service Secretaries and Boards for the Correction of Military Records, is the core of a series of questions recently submitted by the Army to the Comptroller General.

Two questions must be decided by the Comptroller.

The first involves the Comptroller's right to review decisions by the Service Secretaries on the correction of records. The second question will be whether payments resulting from the correction of military records are subject to the ten-year statute of limitations which binds the Comptroller himself and some other government agencies.

In a special brief to the Comptroller General, the Retired Officers Association musters both legal and historical evidence to establish the independence of Service Secretaries from the Comptroller in their function of correcting military records. The brief also backs up present practice of imposing no time limit on payments resulting from the correction of records.

Despite the fact that present procedures to correct records and the authority to make back payments without any time limit are established procedure, the ROA pointed out, the Army has asked the Comptroller for a new decision on the matter.

If the Comptroller decides that he may review the correction of military records or may impose a time limit, the ROA pointed out, it could render many decisions already made by the boards illegal and would have an adverse effect upon future claims of retired officers.

Col. Kujawski Named Deputy At Depot

Col. Joseph S. Kujawski, 124 Woodlawn Ave., Merchantville, N. J., is the new Assistant Depot Commander of the Philadelphia Quartermaster Depot, under Maj. Gen. Webster Anderson.

In September 1957, he was named Commanding Officer of the Giessen Quartermaster Depot in Germany.

Colonel Kujawski was charged with the reorganization of three major Quartermaster support activities in July 1958. These were the former Giessen Depot, the Quartermaster Supply and Control Center in Giessen, and the Quartermaster Market Center in Frankfurt. These organizations were merged 1 July, 1958 under his command, and redesignated the Army Quartermaster Supply Center, Giessen. This new organization had complete supply responsibility for subsistence, general supplies and clothing and textiles for all Armed Forces in Europe. ## Col. Keller Retires At San Diego Base

Uniform Shop Joins Exchange System

The U. S. Naval Uniform Shop, Brooklyn, will become part of the world-wide Navy Exchange system under the Navy Ship's Store Office effective 1 January 1960.

This will consolidate Navy uniform merchandising into a single integrated operation and make custom-tailored, as well as ready-made uniforms and accessories, available to naval officers and chief petty officers through major domestic and overseas sales facilities of the Navy Exchange system.

Under this new arrangement, customers will have one convenient and dependable source to fulfill their individual uniform needs, a Navy announcement said.

When the reorganization becomes effective, custom tailoring service for naval officers and chief petty officers will be as close as the nearest major Navy Exchange store. Approximately 45 attractive, well-planned branch uniform shops located throughout the world will take measurements, obtain custom uniforms by mail from the parent uniform shop in Brooklyn, and provide final fitting services to satisfy special desires of the customers.

U. S. COAST GUARD

Secretary of the Treasury—Robert B. Anderson
Commandant—Vice Adm. Alfred C. Richmond

THE House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has approved legislation (HR 4) authorizing construction of three Coast Guard icebreakers, and has directed the Secretary of the Treasury to study the feasibility of using nuclear power in such ships.

The measure is a revised version of a bill which would have permitted the Coast Guard to begin immediate construction of an atomic-powered icebreaker.

The Navy had advised the Committee that more icebreakers are required but said nuclear power for such ships "is not an urgent need." Navy officials said the major logistic problems of such ships "are hull and propeller repairs, not endurance." They pointed out that two conventional icebreakers could be obtained for the price of a single nuclear-powered cutter.

The Committee concluded, "without modifying its conviction that atomic propulsion is feasible and desirable in modern icebreakers," that it would be better to authorize a study of the subject and give the Coast Guard authority to go ahead with icebreaker construction without specifying the type of propulsion to be used in the ships.

The measure must be approved by the House and go to the Senate for action.

East Coast aircraft squadrons receiving the honor included Patrol Squadrons 10 and 44 and Anti-Submarine Squadron 27, located at Brunswick, Me.; Norfolk; and Oceana, Va.

West Coast squadrons included Patrol Squadrons 19 and 48 and Air Anti-Submarine Squadron 38. VP-48 and VS-38 are homeported at Naval Air Station, North Island, San Diego, Calif. Homeport for VP-19 is Naval Air Station, Alameda, Calif.

Admiral James S. Russell, USN, Vice Chief of Naval Operations, presented engraved plaques representing the Isbell Trophy to VAdm. Alfred M. Pride, USN, Commander, Naval Air Force, Pacific. East Coast plaques will be presented later and announced by local commands.

The award will be presented annually to Naval aviation squadrons which achieve excellence in air anti-submarine warfare. The trophy is named for the late Capt. Arnold Jay Isbell, USN, who distinguished himself during World War II in conducting anti-submarine warfare against hostile submarines thwarting shipping along convoy routes from the United States to North Africa.

The trophy is located in Washington, D. C. The engraved plaques are kept in permanent custody by winning squadrons. The Martin Company of Baltimore, Maryland, co-sponsors the Isbell award program.

Commanding officers of the winning squadrons are:

VP-10, Cdr. William T. Rapp; VP-44, Cdr. Larry W. Frawley; and VS-27, Cdr. R. E. Taylor, USN.

VP-19, Cdr. Edward E. Wood; VP-48, Cdr. Kermit M. E. Miller; and VS-38, Cdr. Paul H. A. Spears.

Babcock & Wilcox Supplies Navy Carrier Gear

The Babcock & Wilcox Company of New York, which has built more than 4500 marine boilers for operation aboard all types of naval vessels, reports that the company is furnishing forgings, lifter tanks, cylinders and plungers for handling and launching carrier-based planes.

The major portion of a more than $4-million Navy contract covers 1200 integral bulb-shaped forgings with yield point strengths of up to 75,000 pounds per sq. inch for the steam catapult system itself.

USAA Licensed In Alaska

Col. Charles E. Cheever, USA-Ret., President of United Services Automobile Association of San Antonio, has announced that USAA became licensed in Alaska, effective 21 August 1959.

POLARIS SUB WILL HAVE BIGGEST PERISCOPE

THE largest submarine periscope ever manufactured—almost 50 feet long—has been delivered by the Kollmorgen Optical Corporation, Northampton, Mass., to General Dynamics Corporation, Electric Boat Division at Groton, Conn., for installation aboard the George Washington, first Polaris missile launching submarine.

Designated the Type 11, the one-ton periscope contains an optical system of more than 40 elements, plus numerous mechanical and electronic controls and components to monitor the submarine's inertial navigation system. This is done by tracking a star and thereby checking the accuracy of a battery of equipment, the purpose of which is to keep the submarine on course even though submerged for prolonged periods. This same equipment is vital to the primary mission of the sub—launching missiles with pinpoint accuracy at targets as much as 1,500 miles away.

The George Washington will carry two other Kollmorgen periscopes in addition to the Type 11. These are of more conventional design and are used for observation and attack purposes.

Reorganization Phase Nears End At Gen. Kuter's NORAD Headquarters

The initial phase of a reorganization of the North American Air Defense Command headquarters at Colorado Springs, Colo., is nearing completion according to General Laurence S. Kuter, CinC of the joint U. S. Canadian organization.

Senior officers from the Army, Air Force, Navy and Royal Canadian Air Force have been named to key positions in the new staff.

These executives will occupy the top positions in the new organizational arrangement which was recommended by former NORAD CinC, General Earle E. Partridge, USAF-Ret., and directed by the U. S. Joint Chiefs of Staff in late June.

The new organization will direct the air defense activities of the U. S. and Canada in a streamlined structure designed to accelerate the receipt of air defense information to keep pace with the speedier and more efficient weapons utilized in the NORAD system.

The reorganization is a direct outgrowth of the U. S. Defense Reorganization Act passed by the Congress in 1958.

It places clear authority in the hands of General Kuter by giving him direct operational control over the U. S. forces assigned to him by the separate services. U. S. forces are administered and directed under the terms set down by the JCS through an administrative headquarters referred to as the Continental Air Defense Command. Under the new arrangement the CONAD title will be retained for administrative purposes, but a single staff will carry out both functions under the CinC, NORAD.

Air defense forces of the Royal Canadian Air Force provided to NORAD are fitted with those of the United States in a single command structure which is

Commander, Air Force Flight Test Center

THE Air Research and Development Command's Flight Test Center at Edwards AFB, Calif., has been the prime facility for testing aircraft since the first USAF jet, the Bell XP-59A, was flown from a dry lake bed here in 1942.

Since that time, Test Center pilots have evaluated, to some degree, every aircraft produced for or obtained by the Air Force. In recent years the Center's mission has been expanded to include captive testing of complex missile systems, high thrust rocket engines, nose cones and other missile components.

In the 17 years since the first test flight at Edwards, the Center's facilities were expanded by a $130,000,000 construction program. This provides a permanent main base, and facilities essential to testing and evaluation of complex aircraft and missile systems.

These include modern maintenance and shop areas, technical and administrative offices, instrument facilities, a 20,000-foot high-speed sled track for simulating free flight conditions, runway and new Main Base.

Nine Mile Runway

A 15,000 by 300 foot runway now connects with the dry lake bed, the Base's first landing field, to provide a total usable length of nine miles. The ramp is nearly a mile long with space and hangars for government contractors who use the Center.

The Base's great expansion began after World War II when Air Force test operations were moved here from Wright Field, Ohio. The move was made to take advantage of natural conditions which make Edwards the perfect testing site.

Here, on the plateau of the Mojave Desert, ninety air miles from Los Angeles, there is an average of 350 good flying days a year. The remote location provides maximum security and safety, but at the same time, the Base is easily accessible by air, rail and highway.

Another important factor is the Center's proximity to the industrial plants of West Coast aircraft and missile manufacturers. This permits convenient liaison and provides these companies with a testing area well removed from metropolitan areas.

And finally, not the least of the natural features that make this the ideal testing site, is the 65-square mile dry lake which was the Base's first landing field. The lake's fine clay and silt bed can support landing pressures up to 250 pounds per square inch. It is usable to supplement the Center's 15,000-foot runway for ten months of the year.

"World's Finest"

During the other two months, the lake bed undergoes a natural resurfacing. In the winter rainwater collects several inches deep on the lake. Pressure of the constant high winds moves this water back and forth, smoothing and refinishing the surface. When the rains cease, wind and sun harden the bed and it is completely renewed for a new year's use as a test facility or recovery area for distressed aircraft. Its natural smoothness and strength, plus this annual renewal, makes it the world's finest natural landing field.

Backing up the superior natural and man-made facilities at the Center are the test engineers—military and civilian—and pilots who represent ability and accumulated experience difficult to match in any organization. Currently their aircraft testing projects range from the L-28 Helio, a lightweight, ultra short field utility aircraft to the giant Boeing B-52G.

In addition to Air Force projects, the Center also performs specified tests of aircraft, helicopters and convertiplanes for the U. S. Army. High altitude testing of these aircraft is done in the nearby Sierra Nevada mountains. Sea level tests take place over the equally convenient Pacific Ocean or the Salton Sea.

Navy Projects

U. S. Navy aircraft are also seen on the Edwards flight line. Navy contractors bring their products to the Center for testing by their own and the Navy's pilots.

Today the Center is looking forward to new projects which will carry man higher and faster than ever before. In the field of "conventional" aircraft the F-108 fighter and the B-70 bomber lie in the not-too-distant future.

Immediately at hand is the research testing program for the rocket propelled X-15, built by North American Aviation for the joint Air Force, NASA and Navy program.

This most recent addition to the Center's experimental research aircraft is a progressive leap in the rocket power program that began 13 years ago with the first powered flight of the X-1.

The first two X-15's built under the current program are now at Edwards for contractor demonstration tests which will precede the actual research flights with NASA, USAF and Navy pilots. A joint Flight Test Steering Committee, chaired by NASA, will direct the X-15 program when the experimental aircraft begins flights to obtain knowledge of flight conditions beyond the earth's atmosphere. The problems of aerodynamic heating and heat transfer attendant to reentry into the atmosphere will also be studied.

Eventually the X-15 may take its pilot over 50 miles above the earth's surface and reach speeds of 3,600 miles per hour. Since only man can prove how man will react to space flight, human factors research also forms a vital part of the X-15 program at Edwards.

X-15 Facilities

Support of research programs always calls for special facilities. The X-15 is no exception. Because these research aircraft must be air-launched, a B-52 bomber was specially modified to launch it at 38,000 feet altitude.

A test complex was built for testing rocket motors both alone and in the aircraft. From a blockhouse in the complex, engineers test and observe visually and by television operation of the XLR-11 interim motor or the effects of the approximately 50,000 pound thrust of the XLR-99, a motor developed for the X-15 program.

Nearby the test stand a mating, servicing and fueling facility for the B-52/X-15 combination was constructed on a special concrete ramp.

Finally, High Range, the data acquisition complex for the X-15 flights has been placed in operation. This is an invisible path in the sky which extends from Wendover, Utah to Edwards, with range stations at Ely and Beatty, Nevada, to supplement the master station at the Center. This provides an electronic track through which the X-15 and its pilot will telemeter back reactions to the problems they face.

Captive testing of missiles and their components closely parallels the pattern of aircraft testing. However, at present this work is done mainly by government contractors supervised by Air Research and Development Command's Ballistic Missile Division.

The Missile Captive Test Site is located on Leuhman Ridge, a rocky spine rising 1,000 feet from the desert some 11 miles east of the main base. On the "ridge" huge gantries rise above the test stands; the largest, capable of withstanding one million pounds of thrust.

On these stands the giant rocket engines and complete missile systems are "fired" in the closest possible approximation of flight. In fact, one stand presently testing a THOR missile, is provided with a large environmental structure which can be closed about the missile. This is then cooled or heated to match the temperatures of flight.

In addition to rocket engine test and evaluation, guidance and control, reliability, structural fitness and ground handling equipment are some of the factors and components evaluated.

Captive Data

Near the stands are located the assembly buildings, liquid oxygen plant, hydrodynamics laboratory, and chemical and photographic laboratories. Large control and data acquisition rooms are matched to the stands for static testing. These can produce as much as 80% more data than free flights of missiles.

These static tests complement actual firings at Cape Canaveral and Vandenberg Air Force Base. They save time and money since the missiles are normally available for post-firing autopsy and refiring.

Construction is now underway for testing the silo-launch concept for Minuteman, and for the 1,500,000 pound thrust engine being developed by Rocketdyne under a NASA contract.

While work at the Rocket Site has been primarily done by contractors with supervision by ARDC's Ballistic Missile Division and support by Flight Test Center, action has been taken to provide an Air Force "in house" testing capability.

One test stand holding an MB-3 THOR engine is already completely operated by Center personnel. At another stand, Douglas Aircraft personnel are training Air Force men in the complicated countdown and testing procedures with a complete THOR missile.

Rocket Test Program

The story of captive rocket testing at Edwards has been one of swift growth since the first firing of a JATO unit on the Ridge in 1953. A continual growth in this increasingly important field is well assured.

Recently it was announced that the ARDC Rocket Engine Applied Research Activity would move to Edwards from Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio to centralize Air Research and Development Command's rocket engine development and testing here. It will also provide closer proximity to the Ballistic Missile Division, to Vandenberg AFB, and to air frame and rocket engine plants on the west coast.

There are other units and facilities assigned to or part of the Center to provide further strength in pursuit of AFFTC's mission of testing tomorrow's aircraft and rocket systems.

One is the 6511th Test Group (Parachute), located at the Naval Auxiliary Air Station, El Centro, California. The 6511th is the Air Force unit at this Department of Defense Joint Parachute Test Center. The Air Force Flight Test Center has responsibility for conduct of the program of this unit in developing and testing of Air Force projects.

Another is the USAF Experimental Test Pilot School, located at Edwards Air Force Base, which is the Air Force's source of test pilots. In addition to flight training, the school's eight-months course gives the students the equivalent of a two-year college refresher course (no credits allowed) in aeronautical engineering.

The High Speed Track Branch operates one of the world's fastest and straightest railways. Specially designed sleds, pushed by liquid or solid propellants are shot down 20,000 feet of track at supersonic velocities to gain data on aerodynamic shapes, escape systems and parachutes. Carefully instrumented, the sleds are recovered by mechanical or water brakes. The Center also has management responsibility for similar operations at the Supersonic Missile and Rocket Track at Hurricane Mesa, Utah.

The Space Positioning Branch provides precise trajectory data for aircraft testing by means of optical equipment and radar. The master station and its nine satellite stations also form part of the International Speed Course certified by the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

These are a few of the major facilities upon which the development and activities of the Center depend. AFFTC now has 17 years of accumulated experience. We at Edwards are confident that Center personnel, using the superb natural and man-devised facilities here will continue to insure the quality of the weapon systems produced for our defense in the future as they have in the past.

We are equally confident that the Center is fully capable of successfully meeting the challenges offered by the continuing advances of our technology.

Changes Are Certain, But Caution Essential

There is no question that major changes in the Nation's military program lie ahead. These will be dictated on the one hand by "get tough" budget action forecast by Secretary of Defense McElroy, and, possibly of even greater moment, by renewed demands from Capitol Hill for Defense Reorganization.

As is fully recognized by Senator Clair Engle of California (see Page 1) and others, such as Representative George Mahon of Texas, Chairman of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, major realignment of Fighting Forces is a complex problem.

We believe it is still too early to give a final assessment to the Defense Reorganization of 1958, which emphasized the role of unified commands. It will take time to implement fully the new concept, as for example the fact that the North American Air Defense Command even now is in the process of reorganization, as reported in this issue.

The 1958 Reorganization gives to the Secretary of Defense broad powers, but obviously he intends to move with deliberate care in order to make certain that vital day-to-day combat readiness is not damaged by the inevitable disruption of reorganization actions. Secretary McElroy is to be commended for this attitude, for first and foremost the Armed Services must not sacrifice combat capability now in favor of projected improvements in economy and effectiveness at some later time.

What must be feared as the Nation approaches an election year is the danger that Defense Reorganization may become embroiled in partisan politics. We hope that the leadership of the Republican and Democratic Parties, most notably President Eisenhower, Secretary McElroy, and the Chairmen of the Armed Services Committees, will shoot down quickly any efforts to make defense Reorganization a heated campaign issue.

All citizens, and certainly members of the Armed Services most of all, want our Nation to have the strongest possible Defense Organization. In attaining this objective, there will be in the future, as there have been in the past, deep-rooted disagreements.

These disagreements must not be silenced or brushed under convenient Pentagon or Capitol Hill rugs. They must be discussed fully and publicly. Precautions must be taken that all such discussions keep foremost in mind the essential requirement that our Armed Forces must be prepared to fight and win at all times. This requirement, we suggest, rules out any radical overnight changes in the structure of our Armed Forces. Changes are certain, but caution is essential.

New Blow Strikes "Hump" Officers

Many Navy and Marine Corps officers will wonder what possibly more can happen to them and their families in the final months of their active duty careers. Morale in senior Sea Service ranks has been under a constant strain, and the situation will be aggravated greatly by the new decision of the Comptroller General reported in last week's issue of THE JOURNAL.

The Comptroller General has barred Navy and Marine Corps "Hump" officers not chosen for continuation and who are found to be eligible for physical disability retirement from receiving the $2,000 force-out payment. This decision flies in the face of Congressional intent.

Navy and Marine Corps officers in the "Hump" could understand—whatever their personal disappointments over abbreviated careers—why it was necessary to accelerate some retirements. But it has been most difficult for them and their families to understand why an arbitrary deadline date—adopted without any opportunity for Pentagon testimony—abruptly will foreclose on 1 November the so-called "tombstone" promotion privilege which has been on the statute books since 1934.

Now, there comes the Comptroller's coldly stated conclusion that officers retired for physical disability are to be denied the $2,000 adjustment pay. This was voted by Congress for "Hump" officers in recognition of the fact that many will be retired on less pay than had been anticipated.

It must be hoped that the Pentagon will rush legislation to Capitol Hill to assure justice for "Hump" officers retired for physical disability. Congress undoubtedly would give high priority to such a measure, since it was the intention of the House and Senate that there be no discrimination against those retired for physical disability.

READERS' VIEWS

No Special Categories

■ The letter in the 15 August issue concerning special benefits for combat disability retirement opens up a possibility for a flood of letters on the subject. The author stated that he had over 28 years' service so he was not personally interested in benefits to those combat disabled personnel without the longevity necessary to benefit from equalized retirement pay. Let me speak for at least one disabled officer with only 8 years of service, a category which places me in the interested group.

You were kind enough to publish a letter of mine concerning the reluctance of the DoD to fight for retirement pay equalization in your historic issue of 18 July. That letter was a plea for equal treatment of all retired officers. Although equalization would mean an increase of my retirement pay of only about one dollar per month because of my lack of longevity, I believed that the principle of retirement pay being based on active duty pay was worth the fight. Please, let's refrain from an attempt to set up more special categories of officers by tinkering with pay scales as between combat and non-combat disabilities. The implication of the letter of the "Col. with 28 years' service" that all officers not combat disabled are time servers who somehow managed to evade combat is unwarranted. The fact that an officer was fortunate enough to participate in combat is largely accidental. Some few might have been able to control their assignments. Most made no such attempt except to try for assignment to a combat command.

The quotation from my old Army commander, General Patton — "Any commander who fails to obtain his objective and is not dead or severely wounded has not done his full duty" — cannot be used to justify the conclusion that combat disabled personnel have done something which should entitle them to an increased retirement pay scale. The commander who does obtain his objective unwounded is duty bound to go right on to the next and the next. And when peace comes, he is duty bound to fight the battles of the budget and training so that his country will be prepared for the next objective. This is an example of "full" duty just as much as is death or disability in combat. Although I am grateful for the tax exemption on pay for combat disability, I have never understood the distinction between combat disability and disability due to a lifetime of service or a disability incurred in line of duty after any amount of service. Every officer is expected to perform all of his duty. Let's don't complicate things with further inequalities.

K's Visit

■ Re: your editorial (15 August) on K's visit and invitation to see "military installations," we hope and pray he will do so and not visit Chicago. Because if he does visit Chicago, he will climb into his limousine at the Palmer House or Connie Hilton, and he will drive down the Outer Drive to the 51st Street rotary and he will stop and get out and walk across the highway to the beach shore, and he will scratch his shiny pate and mutter (in Russian of course) "By golly, that Molotov was right! They are jammed up clear back to North Avenue" (seven miles of traffic jam created by idle curiosity of motorists on the Outer Drive slowing down to see K as they roll past. Molotov just caused a jam back to the Loop from the South Side, but K. being a bigger attraction will cause a bigger jam.) What price "evacuation"?

To put it another way, K. will confirm his military planner's estimates of the defenselessness of America's great cities. One bomb at Hiroshima and a second at Nagasaki—or vice versa—brought the Japanese Empire to an end. What would be the breaking point if Chicago from Milwaukee on the North to Detroit on the East were destroyed, or a lake burst created fallout such as to render the area interdict and its inhabitants the living dead? Would the US "retaliate" or would immediate negotiations be offered? How brave can a Defense Secretary be in ordering "retaliation" when he is risking not his own but the lives of 170,000,000 countrymen?

It takes a brave man, or an insane one, to risk his brother's life. It is easy to be brave when you are all alone. If you goof, you're a dead hero. If you live and others die, who will nominate you as a "hero"? K. will want to see firsthand the state of preparedness in the U.S. and he will see that those persons immediately connected with a military installation have a high survival quotient but the mass of U.S. citizens are, with present planning and equipment, expendable. Perhaps that "surrender study" was quashed in the Congress because of the truths it would have revealed? It is always convenient to put off until tomorrow what you should do today, since with the potential for devastation possessed by many nations, why tomorrow may never come. . . .

IN THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago—High-speed aerial refueling recently developed by Sir Alan Cobham, the noted British engineer, may revolutionize both military and commercial aviation. Recent tests of the new technique developed by this distinguished aeronautical engineer demonstrated that 600 gallons of fuel could be transferred simultaneously to three jet fighters in 90 seconds.

50 Years Ago—It has been said that the Chinese would make excellent soldiers because of their ability to endure pain. Perhaps their stoicism under pain is due to their experience with native doctors.

95 Years Ago—The recent act of Congress increasing the pay of soldiers is received with general approbation by every officer of the Army. Those only who are in daily contact with them, and in part sharers of their dangers and sufferings, can really appreciate the value to the country of the services of the private soldiers.

"Hump" And The Abyss

■ All I want to say on the "Hump" situation and the blitzy action in killing "tombstone" promotions is that this kind of treatment for career officers can do nothing but send morale in all the Services into a deep abyss.

Let Army and Air Force Officers understand that if promises can be broken for use in the Sea Services, the same thing can happen to them. All of us are in the same boat and it's being rocked violently.

AN ANGRY COMMANDER

From first page—

have no unique Service orientation." Although the Committee made no suggestion as to which Service would take over in the event of a merger, it declared that the Army "has more technical resources to offer than the Air Force in this respect." The House group said the Air Force "to a greater extent than the other Services depends on private contractors to develop, technically manage, produce, and even to deploy its strategic missiles . . . and probably it will look to private contractors to help maintain the missiles."

The House recommendations were presented in a 156-page report on the organization and management of missile programs in the Armed Forces, drafted by the Hollifield Military Operations Subcommittee and unanimously supported by the full, 30-member, Committee.

The group called on President Eisenhower to direct a study of the proposed Army-Air Force merger. This step, the Committee said, "would by no means solve all the problems of military organization and command relationships, but it would solve many, and lay the groundwork for solution of the others. It is reasonably certain," the Committee declared, "that these problems will never be solved by the present tri-service arrangements."

In the past, the Committee noted, "weapons could be adapted reasonably well to Service missions, now missions must be adapted to weapon systems."

The "decisive weapon" for the next decade is "the strategic missile with nuclear warhead," the Committee said. "In its land-based aspect, particularly, it calls for a single military organization to develop, produce and deploy the weapons. In the future, this need will be even stronger when the same weapon system may serve for both retaliation and defense against missile attack."

The Committee charged that "Whatever the formal definitions of their roles and missions, all the Services are engaged in a race for missiles and space."

In this connection, Senator Engle urged that the Armed Forces be stripped of their space and satellite development programs and that this authority be transferred to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. He recommended establishment of a military applications division in NASA to speed Service requirements in the space field.

Although both the House Committee report and Senator Engle's carefully documented blueprint cover some of the same areas and embrace some of the same philosophies, the Senator's recommendations range over a much wider area and prescribe more definitive steps, including abolition of the Advanced Research Projects Agency and consolidation and merger of dozens of offices and activities, with eventual creation of a single Chief of Staff.

The Senator's views won immediate support from four other members of the Armed Services Committee: Senators Stuart Symington (D-Mo), John C. Stennis (D-Miss), Sam J. Ervin, Jr. (D-NC) and E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska).

Senator Stennis said there is no solution to present military problems "within the framework of our present organization," and the ultimate result will be "a unified Service or one Service."

FALL OUT AND FALL IN

TO do away with the separate Service designations would be a "bruising step" according to Senator Clair Engle (D-Calif.), who has proposed just such a move.

Discussing the problems on the Senate floor, he recalled that Abraham Lincoln once "was having trouble getting a military company over a fence."

Lincoln, the Senator said, "did not know what kind of order to give to get the company over the fence, so he gave the order, 'Halt.' Then he said, 'Fall out, and fall in on the other side of the fence.' That is what is needed in the Defense Department. Somebody needs to say, 'Fall out,' as far as the present Service designations are concerned, 'and fall in on the other side of the fence,' in a different kind of lineup."

Senator Proposes Functional Road

It will not be possible for the Defense Department to "get organized in terms of functional forces," Senator Clair Engle (D-Calif.) says, "until we have wiped out the present organizational system and created a unification of the forces."

Here are some of the "problems" Senator Engle thinks will have to be solved "in a complete integration of the military services:

"1—It will be necessary to consolidate four separate promotion lists. Senators may recall the difficulty back in the late forties—when large numbers of Reserve officers were integrated into the Regular services—of fitting them equitably into the promotion lists. Senators can imagine the problem of consolidating the entire promotion lists of the Army, the Navy, Air Force, and Marines.

"2—A collateral problem will be the consolidation of four separate lists of personnel serial numbers, or an adoption of a totally new list of numbers. At the present time each service has its own system of serial numbers.

"3—Mountains of paper will be involved in changing the personnel records to reflect the consolidation of the four separate promotion lists and the consolidation of the four separate lists of serial numbers.

"4—There will have to be a consolidation of service regulations or their replacement by a new set of regulations. At the present time each service has its own regulations. They have been different with reference to reserve requirements. This applies both to Regulars and Reserves of each of the services, all having separate regulations.

"5—The merger of the technical services will require a lot of time and patience; for example, here—in no special order—are some of the mergers which would be involved:

"(a) The Army Engineers and Navy Seabees and Engineers.

"(b) The various service medical units.

"(c) Quartermaster and supply services.

"(d) Ordnance and weapons procurement.

"(e) Aircraft procurement.

"(f) Judge advocates general.

"(g) Chaplains.

"One would think they would be able to unify the chaplains in the service without any trouble at all.

"(h) Special services for the respective services, such as PX's, theaters, recreation, and so forth.

"(i) Research and development activities.

"(j) Logistic support.

"(k) Transportation.

"(l) Finance operations—paymasters.

"(m) Comptrollers and auditors.

"(n) Provost marshals.

"(o) Signal communications.

"(p) Intelligence activities—this includes attachés to the various embassies.

"We would think that we could get the attachés to the embassies unified without too much trouble.

"(q) Adjutants general and personnel activities.

"(r) Career management for officers and senior noncoms.

"(s) Service schools and colleges.

"(t) Chemical, biological, and radiological warfare.

"(u) Posts, camps, stations, bases, and shore establishments.

"(v) Inspectors general.

"(w) Reserve and National Guard activities.

"(x) Bringing Joint Chiefs of Staff into harmony with new defense reorganization.

"(y) Civilian personnel administration."

JOINT CHIEFS ROLE

Commenting on the role of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in the numerous controversies over weapon systems, the House Government Operations Committee says:

"The problem of choosing among weapon systems cannot be resolved by passing it to the Joint Chiefs as the supreme court of military weapons decisions. More often than not, the Joint Chiefs are split on basic weapons needs and strategies, for they are Service spokesmen first and Defense spokesmen second.

"So while the Joint Chiefs by law are the principal military advisers to the Secretary of Defense, their 'split papers' compel him to rely on civilian advisers who shape the defense posture without any professional military competence whatever."

House Group Pinpoints Its Views

made to determine whether the merger of the Army and Air Force would be the best course of action. We recommend that the President direct the appropriate authorities to undertake such studies.

"An Army-Air Force merger would by no means solve all the problems of military organization and command relationships, but it would solve many, and lay the groundwork for solution of the others. It is reasonably certain that these problems will never be solved by the present triservice arrangements. No amount of effort spent in "clarifying" roles and missions can overcome the ruthless logic of weapon technology. Whereas in the past, weapons could be adapted reasonably well to service missions, now missions must be adapted to weapon systems.

"The strategic missile with nuclear warhead is the decisive weapon of the next decade. In its land-based aspect, particularly, it calls for a single military organization to develop, produce and deploy the weapons. In the future, this need will be even stronger when the same weapon system may serve for both retaliation and defense against missile attack.

"With a single military service to develop, build and deploy ballistic missiles, obvious advantages would seem to accrue:

"The talents and resources of both services can be unified, preserving the best in each system, and eliminating enormous overhead in manpower and facilities.

"Technical capabilities of the Army and the Air Force will be teamed with a diversified missile industry to produce future weapons efficiently at lower cost. . .

"The bitter controversy over air defense missions will be ended. Great savings in money will be realized. Service morale and prestige will be heightened. Air defense will get needed emphasis in military planning and budget allocations.

"The military role and interest in space will become clarified. The need for ARPA as intervenor for advanced research in weaponry and space will be eliminated. ARPA functions can be redistributed between NASA and the unified military service, reducing civilian-military competition and duplication in space.

"The interservice conflicts over airlift, tactical support aviation and other matters will be ended, and integrated planning for limited war as well as strategic missions can be effected.

"Problems between the unified military service and the Navy would remain, but these would be of vastly lesser dimension; and ultimately, if weapon logic dictates, a single service in place of three could be organized.

"The subcommittee appreciates the concern over service merger expressed in some congressional quarters during the debate on the 1958 defense reorganization bill. We recognize also that the problems of organizing and supporting unified geographic or functional military commands will have to be attacked whether there is one service, two, or three.

"Nevertheless, we are convinced, and we believe this report provides evidence enough for the conviction, that until the Air Force and the Army join hands in a single service effort, the costs of defense will mount ever higher, duplication and waste will grow likewise, and the Nation will be exposed to the vitiating effects of interservice jealousies, rivalries and wars for many years to come."

LYLE S. GARLOCK, Assistant Secretary of the Air Force, is a top prospect to succeed Assistant Secretary of Defense W. J. McNeil. The Pentagon's top Comptroller—he has held the post since Unification began in 1948—Mr. McNeil is expected to leave Federal service this Fall.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S POLICY of promotion from within the ranks and his high qualifications make Mr. Garlock, a WWII Naval officer, the logical successor to Assistant Secretary McNeil, for whom he served as top deputy before becoming AF Assistant Secretary in 1954.

WHERE SCORES OF OTHER PENTAGON CIVILIANS have scurried from office after short tours to accept lucrative jobs in industry, Mr. McNeil has sacrificed many thousands of dollars in added income during recent years to stay on the job. One compelling factor in his expected resignation was the tragic death 27 May of his son, LCdr. Wilfred J. McNeil, jr., USNA '42, in a carrier accident in the Mediterranean. Commander McNeil left a wife and five children.

THE ARMY'S ANNOUNCEMENT (see Page 1) concerning the end of unit rotation—known as Gyroscope—failed to mention that word. It was as if the Army wanted to forget the glowing long-range forecasts which were made for the Gyroscope Program when it was announced five years ago.

GENERAL BRUCE C. CLARKE, who had traveled thousands of miles in Germany during his tour as Seventh Army Commander, is maintaining the same kind of pace as CG of the Continental Army Command at Ft. Monroe, Va. Completing a year in that assignment last month, he has covered 150,000 miles visiting Active, National Guard and Reserve units in the United States and delivering scores of "grass roots" reports to civilian groups.

THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL'S DECISION (see Page 24) to deprive the West Point Cadet Chaplain of quarters allowances will revive a long-standing dispute between the Chief of Chaplains Office and other branches of the Army. For the past 30 years, the Chief of Chaplains' Office has been fighting to install a military chaplain as USMA Cadet Chaplain. Each time the proposal came up, it was vetoed by Army personnel planners and the Secretary of the Army.

NO CIVILIAN CHAPLAINS ARE ASSIGNED to either the Naval or Air Force Academies. The Navy has four—this will soon be increased to five—military chaplains who jointly service all Annapolis activities. Two military chaplains are assigned to the U. S. Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs.

DOUBLE MILEAGE ALLOWANCES soon will be authorized for Armed Forces personnel who use their own cars to travel from home or duty station to train, plane or bus terminals on official travel orders. Service officials feel that the seven cents a mile allowance for the trip from home to the carrier terminal does not compensate adequately for the expenses involved, especially when an individual's wife must make the full round trip when she drives him from home to the station or picks him up at the station. Paying the round trip fare, double what is now authorized, will also be cheaper than taxi fare, officials feel. The authorization for round-trip fare, not to exceed normal taxi fare, will be included in amendments to paragraphs 4401-2 and 4402 of the Joint Travel Regulations.

THE COAST GUARD has presented to the USCG Academy Board of Visitors the need for a $6.5 million construction program at New London, Conn., highlighted by additional class space, a new maintenance building, an auditorium, and student activities building. The Board of Visitors learned that the attrition rate at the Coast Guard Academy, although declining, is expected to level off at about 50%, compared with the 28-32% loss reported for West Point.

MAJ. GEN. DAVID M. SHOUP, nominated by President Eisenhower to be the next Commandant of the Marine Corps, will take on a Second Marine assignment. He will serve as President of the Second Marine Corps Division Association for 1960. While serving with the Division during WWII, General (then colonel) Shoup won the Medal of Honor in the Battle of Tarawa.

MESS COOK DUTY, a facsimile of K.P., is being tossed overboard for sailors at the Enlisted Men's Galley (mess hall) at the Subic Bay Naval Base in the Philippines. Filipino-civilian employees will be used. It's part of a growing program in all the Services to replace military manpower with civilians in mess halls and/or galleys.

AT 66 YEARS OF AGE on official records—he believes he is actually 70—M/Sgt. Richard Tuson, said to be the first Filipino to become a naturalized U. S. citizen in 1918, is enroute to duty in Korea. He expects to retire next year after 20 years service and then plans to attend college.

ARMY AVIATION ACTIVITIES will receive national attention early next month. A special press demonstration is being arranged for 7 October at the Army Aviation Center, Ft. Rucker, Ala., commanded by Brig. Gen. Ernest F. Easterbrook.

ARMY LEADERS WILL BE PLEASED with some of the views expressed by the House Government Operations Committee in its report on Service missile programs. In recommending merger of the Army and Air Force, the Committee pointedly side-stepped the issue of which Service should be given top billing. However, certain of the Committee's statements no doubt will be cited by Army enthusiasts as indicative of the House group's sentiment.

TELL-TALE CLUES to which the Army will point include these statements: (1) Although the Air Force has operational control of all strategic missiles "and a lion's share of the development-production programs," strategic missiles "have nothing to do with the basic reasons for creating a separate Air Force." (2) The strategic missile, "particularly in its land-based aspects," calls for a single military organization to develop, produce and deploy the weapons. (3) In considering the ability of each Service to build missiles, "it is obvious that all three are competent," but "the Army and Navy have a decided advantage over the Air Force by virtue of their 'inhouse' technical capabilities."

BEST OF ALL, FROM THE ARMY VIEWPOINT, is this statement: "As the newer generations of strategic missiles like the Minuteman lose their 'aircraft' look and are detached from fixed (Air Force) bases, to be deployed in ravines and hardened silos or on moving railway cars, the suitability of exclusive operational control by an Air Force as such becomes completely questionable. The Army could well argue that the fielding of missiles in rough terrain and on moving vehicles is more appropriately its job."

AIR FORCE CHIEFS QUICKLY WILL POINT OUT that the controversial views on missile forces are expressed by the Government Operations Committee, and not the Armed Services or Appropriations Committees. Nonetheless, it is 100% sure that the Air Force, and all the other Services, will study the Operations Committee report in minute detail and immediately will begin preparation of "position papers" related to the major recommendation of the House group.

WITH ALL MANNER OF COMMITTEES advising Secretary McElroy how to run the Defense Department, he must reassert Administration leadership forcefully. Failure to convince Congress that he is attaining maximum utilization of available forces will open the Services to repeated barrage attack from Capitol Hill. During recent months—understandably because he was busy in Washington with numerous projects—Secretary McElroy has delivered few public addresses across the Nation. He needs now, in effect, to take to the road and convince the public that the picture of Armed Forces confusion and controversy which has been developed in Congress is out of focus with the facts. Otherwise, Secretary McElroy must be prepared for continuing troubles from the Hill, which will become aggravated in an election year atmosphere.

ONE DIFFICULTY THE SECRETARY FACES in communicating the Defense story to the public is the fact that his top associates, specifically the Secretaries of the Services, largely have been talking only platitudes in their public remarks and have elected—obviously with top Pentagon consent—to avoid hard-hitting speeches. Secretary McElroy need not answer the charges from Capitol Hill alone. It would be better if he didn't, but someone is going to have to change the "clearance" procedure for the Service Secretaries and the Joint Chiefs if their remarks are to score a major impact with U. S. citizens who are being told from Congress that all is not well with the Defense Establishment.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST PERSONNEL on the temporary disability retired lists has been upheld by the Comptroller General. In a letter to the Army, he states that the Government can not pay the expenses of non-Government attendants who travel with these disabled personnel to their required physical examinations, even though the disabled Servicemen are not capable of travelling alone. But, the Comptroller points out, the Government may pay the expenses of attendants accompanying personnel to Veterans Administration facilities for examination or treatment.

A PENTAGON REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION to reverse the Comptroller's decision against those physically disabled certainly would receive favorable action on Capitol Hill. It remains to be seen whether the Pentagon seeks such authority. The numbers affected are not great, but a fight for new legislation would hearten every person in Service, whether on active or retired status.

ONE QUESTION IN THE MOSS LETTER to Secretary McElroy (see Page 1) which is certain to stir inter-Service interest concerns whether or not General Powers' banned book was submitted to the other Services for comments. There are reports that a number of articles by Air Force people have been sent to the Army and Navy for comment, and that the reverse is not the case. If this is true, it could be a "sleeper" that would provide material for lively action at a Congressional inquiry into all the circumstances surrounding the decision by Secretary McElroy to bar publication of General Powers' book.

AF Opens Regular Slots To Physicians

More openings for Regular appointments in the Air Force Medical Service have been made available to physicians who graduated from medical school in 1955 and 1956.

Augmentation into Regular ranks had been denied many of these officers because of the established limitation on the number of Regular officers who may be appointed in any one Promotion List Service Group.

This limitation has been lifted for 1955 and 1956 medical school graduates on active duty.

Applications from all eligible physicians in these year groups will be given full consideration. Those applicants who meet the criteria in Air Force Regulation 36-21, dated 29 April 1959, will be offered Regular appointments.

Maj. Gen. Elbert DeCoursey, Commandant of the Army Medical Service School at Ft. Sam Houston, Tex., since August 1955, will retire 30 September after more than 31 years' service. He will become Director of the Southwest Foundation for Research and Education, and Director of Scientific Research at Trinity University, as a full professor. General and Mrs. DeCoursey will reside at 114 Brandon Drive, West, in San Antonio.

Col. Aubrey L. Jennings is the new Director of Professional Services, Office of the Air Force Surgeon General. He replaced Brig. Gen. Victor A. Byrnes, who retires 30 September. Colonel Jennings has served as Surgeon of USAF Headquarters Command for the past five years. Upon retirement, General Byrnes will be affiliated with the Mound Park Hospital in St. Petersburg, Fla., as Director of Medical Education.

Navy Doctor Cited

CAPT. Julius M. Amberson, USN-Ret., receives from Vice Admiral Thomas S. Combs, left, Commandant Third Naval District, the Navy's Bureau of Medicine and Surgery Certificate of Exceptional Service "in recognition of his pre-eminent accomplishments in the Medical Department of the United States Navy for almost three decades, during which his career has been unique and unparalleled." He is presently affiliated with the Norwich Pharmaceutical Company of Norwich, New York. He lives at 28 Mitchell Street in Norwich.

Captain Amberson was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal in 1945 for his discovery in India of a new treatment for Asiatic cholera. In 1949 he was cited by the Secretary of the Navy for outstanding scientific contributions resulting from his intrepid African safari which took him 15,000 miles from Port Said to Capetown.

During WW II Captain Amberson served as a division surgeon with Marines in the Pacific. In Europe he participated in the landings in southern France.

In 1952 Captain Amberson served as Force Medical Officer for an amphibious group involved in the construction of Thule AB in Greenland. In 1954 he was responsible for the medical program in the movement of 15,000 Chinese prisoners of war from Korea to Formosa.

He has been engaged by many foreign governments as a consultant in outbreaks of epidemic diseases, such as bubonic plague, Japanese encephalitis, epidemic typhus, oriental typhus, malaria, and the African trypanosomiasis.

Poison Meeting In 1961

A "Typo Bug" bit THE JOURNAL in the 22 August issue, which reported an unusual assignment for Maj. Hugh L. Keegan, MSC, Brooke Army Medical Center, Ft. Sam Houston, Tex.

It was reported that Major Keegan planned and coordinated a symposium on poisonous plants and animals in the Pacific Ocean area for the Pacific Science Congress in Honolulu, 21 August-9 September.

The "Typo Bug" chewed out the year of the symposium—1961.

Reorganization Phase Completed At NORAD Headquarters

entitled North American Air Defense Command.

The JCS decision to streamline the control of U. S. forces in the air defense business came about as a result of General Partridge's recommendations in December 1958. At that time he presented to the Department of Defense his plan for consolidation of the individual service air defense headquarters into a single headquarters whose commander would have full operational command of the U. S. services assigned.

General Kuter is equally responsible to the Canadian Chiefs of Staff Committee and to the JCS on all matters relative to the forces provided to him. This arrangement was authorized by the U. S. and Canadian governments in September 1957, and the present reorganization of the NORAD headquarters will, in no way, affect that arrangement.

In General Kuter's absence Royal Canadian Air Force Marshal C. Roy Slemon, Deputy CinC, NORAD, exercises NORAD authority over U. S. and Canadian units and has direct responsibilities to the JCS and the Canadian Chiefs of Staff Committee.

In announcing the assignment of officers to the key positions on the NORAD staff, General Kuter pointed out that the top NORAD headquarters jobs have not changed. The NORAD Chief of Staff slot will continue to be filled by U. S. Army Maj. Gen. Marshall S. Carter who has held this position for the last three years. The Assistant Chief of Staff continues to be USAF Maj. Gen. Harvey T. Alness, also a member of the NORAD staff for the last three years.

Under the new NORAD organization, seven separate deputy positions roughly comparable to office departments in civilian industry have been organized. Each deputy will handle his allocated phase of the NORAD operation and will, in turn, divide his department into subsections, called directorates.

The deputies will handle NORAD assignments in the following categories: Personnel & Administration, Intelligence, Operations, Logistics, Plans &

Policy, Communications & Electronics, and Programs.

USAF Col. W. T. Coleman, who recently arrived at the NORAD headquarters from Pacific Air Force headquarters, Hickam Field, Hawaii, has become the Deputy CofS/Personnel & Administration. Deputy CofS/Intelligence, USAF Brig. Gen. Frank B. James, is another recent arrival at NORAD. Prior to his NORAD assignment, he was Air Attache in London.

The vital NORAD position of Deputy CofS/Operations is occupied by Royal Canadian Air Force Air Vice Marshal Keith L. B. Hodson who will have as his assistants U. S. Army Brig. Gen. Milton L. Ogden, who came to NORAD from the U. S. Army Caribbean, and U. S. Navy Capt. Eugene Tatom filling a rear admiral position in the new organization.

NORAD Deputy CofS/Logistics is Col. Franklin G. Smith, who fills a brigadier general officer position. He came to NORAD from an assignment as Commanding Officer of the 2d U. S. Army Missile Command at Fort Carson, Colo.

USAF Maj. Gen. Dolf E. Muehleisen, who until recently had been Deputy for Plans with the NORAD component USAF Air Defense Command, is now Deputy CofS/Plans and Policy. His assistant will be a U. S. Army Brig. Gen. Ethan A. Chapman, formerly Assistant CofS of the Army Air Defense Command staff in Colorado Springs.

Directing the far-flung NORAD communications network will be U. S. Army Brig. Gen. Francis F. Uhrhane, who has been serving in a similar position with the NORAD command for the last two years. USAF Brig. Gen. Arthur J. Pierce, former NORAD Director of Plans and Requirements, will take over the Deputy CofS/Programming under the new organization.

Remaining in their present positions under the reorganization will be Col. Barney Oldfield, Command Information Services Officer, Lt. Col. Richard Bassler, Director of Audio Visual Services, and Maj. Charles Miniatta, Director of Protocol.

Additionally, General Kuter has Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization Mr. D. B. Cruikshank and Federal Aviation Agency Mr. G. I. Smith to advise him on matters pertaining to either of these government agencies.

Gyroscope Spins In

From first page—

troop movements to Europe will be made under a Carrier Company Replacement System, in conjunction with the personalized Individual Replacement System.

As for Korea, the Army said that battle group rotation will be used for the Eighth Army, in conjunction with the Individual Replacement System.

The Army commented that the tours of battle groups in Korea will be the same as the current tour for all other units and individuals—13 months.

Gyroscope to Europe was based on a minimum 18-month overseas tour.

An Army announcement recited advantages for the new systems for both Korea and Europe.

Concerning the unit rotation to Korea the Pentagon statement said: "Its many desirable features, including unit integrity and teamwork of officers and enlisted men who have trained together in the United States prior to going overseas, are expected to improve the combat effectiveness of the U. S. Eighth Army in Korea."

Concerning the Carrier Company Replacement System to be used for Europe the Army said that it "offers advantage for that theater over the present unit rotation program. CCRS is a replacement system under which individuals will be formed into four-man teams for training, and will be formed into companies at the outset of advanced individual training."

The Carrier Companies will vary from 70 to 250 soldiers.

The system of holding four-man team together, the Army said, "will provide continuity of association and friendship for young soldiers undergoing transition from civilian to military life and then to a foreign environment."

Navy Balloonist Receives DFC

James H. Wakelin, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Research and Development, presented the medal to Commander Ross at a Pentagon ceremony.

The text of the citation which sets forth Ross' efforts is as follows:

"For extraordinary achievement in aerial flight as Command Pilot of a two-man, Navy balloon and gondola during 26-27 July 1958. Testing aloft, under actual operating conditions, a new-type, sealed environment in the gondola, which contained a completely artificial atmosphere comparable to that at sea level, Commander Ross removed his helmet and oxygen mask, except for take-off and landing, for the duration of the flight at pressure altitudes ranging from 79,500 feet to 82,000 feet, thereby risking instant death in the event of decompression. In addition to setting a new, unofficial world endurance record for sustained flight into the stratosphere of thirty-four hours and thirty-nine minutes, he also successfully completed approximately twenty-seven other scientific experiments conducted aloft as a scheduled part of the flight, attracting widespread public action and acclaim. By his outstanding professional skill, courage, and inspiring efforts, Commander Ross made a highly significant contribution to man's scientific quest into space. His distinguished performance of duty was in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States Naval Service."

Civil Service And Comptroller Combine To Take Home From West Point Chaplains

THE civilian cadet chaplain at the U. S. Military Academy will no longer be entitled to quarters or a quarters allowance in addition to his salary.

The allowances are authorized under an 1896 act, which provides for employment of a civilian chaplain at West Point at the same salary and quarters allowance of a captain.

Earlier this year the Civil Service Commission decided that the job of Cadet Chaplain fell under Civil Service rules.

Assistant Comptroller General Frank H. Weitzel followed this up with the conclusion that quarters allowances may no longer be paid to the Cadet Chaplain.

and various parts for the GAM-72 "Quail" missile totalling more than $1.75 million. Summers has been working with McDonnell since early 1957 on the GAM-72.

The Army Quartermaster Corps has established an office at the Army Ordnance Missile Command headquarters at Huntsville, Ala. Maj. Gen. J. B. Medaris, Commanding General, said other branches and technical services of the Army, such as Signal, Engineer and Transportation Corps, the Continental Army Command and the Army Air Defense Command, also have staff representatives at the AOMC headquarters to round out a fully-integrated Army missile development organization.

The Quartermaster office is being headed by Maj. Kermet Applewhite, who has been in the Office, Chief of R&D, Department of the Army, since 1955.

The Air Force has successfully launched a new inertially-guided TM-76B Martin Mace tactical missile from a simulated ground shelter at Holloman AFB, N. M. The "B" model Mace is among the first of a new series of Mace missiles for which the Secretary of Defense and other U. S. military leaders recently waged a successful battle to obtain production funds in the 1960 military budget. After being launched from its shelter, the missile was flown a distance of 500 nautical miles to Wendover AFB, Utah, where it was brought safely to earth with an integral parachute and landing-mat recovery system.

A POLARIS test vehicle was successfully launched from the USS Observation Island at 12:50 p.m. 27 August at sea off Cape Canaveral, Fla., in the Atlantic Missile Range. Performance was satisfactory, and all test objectives appear to have been attained, the Pentagon said. This was the first launch of a Polaris test vehicle from a ship at sea. The missile was sent aloft from a launching tube similar to that which will be installed in the Polaris submarines.

Four New Directorates Are Activated By M/G Funk At AMC Missiles Center

Major reorganization of the AMC Ballistic Missiles Center at Inglewood, Calif., is announced by Maj. Gen. Ben I. Funk, Commander.

The changes will improve management control in the complex missiles programs, and will recognize the growing importance of Air Force aerospace satellite and space systems, General Funk said.

BMC is responsible for procurement, production and logistic support of the Air Force ICBM, IRBM, and satellite and space probe vehicle systems.

Reorganization will combine former independent key staff agencies for procurement and production into a single new Directorate of Procurement and Production, under Col. Samuel W. Bishop.

The former organizations of the Atlas, Titan, Thor and Minuteman missile weapon systems have been brought together under a new Directorate of Ballistic Missiles, headed by Col. John A. Hewitt.

A new Directorate of Satellite and Space Systems, under Col. Sherman E. Ellis, will encompass the former Directorate of Satellite Systems, and Special Projects.

The former Directorates for Sub-Systems and for Resources have been combined into the Directorate of Equipment and Installations, headed by Col. William W. Snively, and will include functions of resources, installations, guidance, propulsion and re-entry vehicles.

Other reorganization changes have established new offices. Among these are an Assistant to the Commander, a Policies and Procedures Office, a Plans Division within the Plans and Programs Office, an Architectural and Engineering Services Division and a Support Division within the Directorate of Equipment and Installations.

Hebert Hearings Are Concluded With Testimony Of Former CNO

will be "utterly futile, in view of the way the Navy is organized and its procurement functions carried out."

He said: "It is not possible for any one man, no matter who he is, to have significant influence on Navy procurement action. I do not think any substantial proposal can be sold to the Navy, except on its merits."

In answer to questions about the so-called "cooling off" period which has been suggested by numerous witnesses, Admiral Fechteler said: "I don't know that any specific cooling-off period is necessary." If it is, he said, it should be related only to an officer's last duty assignment and to the type of job he takes.

He said a cooling-off period would be "just another restriction that would make the military Services less attractive." Admiral Fechteler served as a member of the Cordiner Committee, which recommended the 1958 overhaul of the military pay structure.

He told the committee that if restrictions are imposed or continued, they should be made to apply equally to all retired officers. He added, however, that the United States is the only major country that places such restrictions on its retired officers.

Admiral Fechteler said he thinks the dual-employment and dual-compensation statutes serve only to deprive the Government of "valuable assistance." It is not so much that the individual is deprived of job opportunities, he said, but rather what the Nation loses.

He said he thinks the committee can "perform a valuable service in dispelling confusion and misunderstanding," and, with the aid of the Defense Department and others who have studied the problem, "formulate rules for the conduct of retired officers and of other former Government employees which are uniform and which are clearer and more explicit than the rules now on the books."

In answer to Chairman Hébert's questions, Admiral Fechteler testified that he receives $12,177 in military pay, and $30,000 from General Electric, plus incentive compensation from GE which totalled $7,000 in 1957 and $8,500 in 1958.

As a General Electric employee, Admiral Fechteler said he has arranged a number of meetings between GE officials and officials of the Navy Department, but that he, himself, never sits in on the meetings if they relate in any way to procurement or contracting.

He told the committee that the current lifetime restrictions which are imposed on Navy officers are "unnecessarily severe."

Admiral Fechteler was retired on 1 July 1956, following service as CinC, Allied Forces, Southern Europe, and was recalled to active duty to serve with the Cordiner Committee. He was again released from active duty on 30 November 1956 and joined General Electric the next day.

He noted that throughout his Naval career, he "never had any duty involving procurement," nor had he ever "had any business of any sort with General Electric." The fact that he is a retired officer, he said, should not inhibit his employment in a liaison capacity "so long as I carefully observe the restrictions placed upon me regarding selling or contracting or negotiating to sell."

He said it seems clear that the Department of Defense "is anxious to maintain the closest liaison with industry."

AE CAN DO

Picture a naval ship's radio system under full dial control from 60 positions. It has been done—using basic switching systems developed by AE.

Two separate systems, one with 45 transmitter-receiver units and 30 remotes, and another with 30 transmitter-receiver units and 30 remotes, can be switched to any of 45 frequency channels, and accessed by dialing from the remote control positions. Communications can be restricted to conference circuits or fed to the ship's public-address system.

Automatic switching such as this is right down AE's alley. In fact, AE switchboard equipment is used on all first-line ships of the Navy.

Senator Hits DoD Ban On Power Book; Says People "Are Entitled To The Facts"

Senator Stuart Symington (D-Mo.) has criticized the Defense Department for banning publication of a book by General Thomas S. Power, Commander in Chief of the Strategic Air Command.

Details of the ban were disclosed in THE JOURNAL issue of 22 August. It was through this article, Senator Symington said, that General Power first learned of the Defense Department action. The SAC Commander called the Pentagon for confirmation of the story and was advised that clearance of the book, "Design for Survival," had been withheld because the Defense Department did not consider it "appropriate."

Senator Symington, a former Secretary of the Air Force, said: "In a democratic form of government the people have the right to all truth which does not help a possible enemy."

He told the Senate that General Power had decided to write the book upon the urging of numerous persons who had heard him discuss various aspects of survival in the nuclear age. The General was motivated, he said, "by the conviction that the Nation's problems cannot be solved unless the American people understand these problems."

The Senator noted that General Power discussed the project with the Air Force and obtained full approval before writing the book. He said the SAC Commander "prepared the manuscript entirely on his own time, and at his own expense." A notation on the title page, he said, pointed out that the opinions expressed in the book were the General's own and did not necessarily reflect the views of the Air Force or the Defense Department.

The book was submitted for clearance on 2 April, Senator Symington said, and, "when month after month passed without a decision, General Power learned that there were certain problems in connection with the clearance, but it proved impossible to find out exactly who was holding up the clearance and why."

Senator Symington said General Power, after learning of the ban in THE JOURNAL, called Assistant Secretary of Defense Murray Snyder to verify the report.

Because the General "was under the impression that the financial aspect might be a major item of objection, he offered Mr. Snyder to turn over all potential profits to the U. S. Treasury," Senator Symington said, "emphasizing that his only motive in writing this book was to help make the American public better informed."

Senator Symington called the Senate's attention to the fact that at least 10 books have been written by senior military officers while they were still on active duty. The list of authors includes President Eisenhower, General of the Army Omar Bradley, General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, General George Kenney and VADM. Hyman G. Rickover.

Senator Symington said: "If this country is to remain adequately strong, we must face up to the realities of this present era—and to do that the people must have the truth."

He added: "It now appears that the most able and experienced leaders of our Military Establishment are going to be denied the right to present that truth."

Senator Symington asked: "If this is to be future policy, how can the American people obtain the facts about the status of our national defense?"

He said: "Not only are they entitled to know those facts, but they deserve to receive them from the best possible sources—and General Power is exactly that type of source."

The Senator noted that General Power "has attained the respect of the Congress because of his candor, his sincerity and the logic of his experienced views."

Navy Will Retire 296 "Hump" Captains

The first captain continuation board convened under the "Hump" legislation has completed its deliberations, which were approved by the President 29 August 1959.

Category	Number Continued	Number Considered
Unrestricted Line	372	608
Restricted Line	81	117
Supply, Chaplain, and CEC	42	66

Officers considered by this board are being notified on an individual basis of their retirement status.

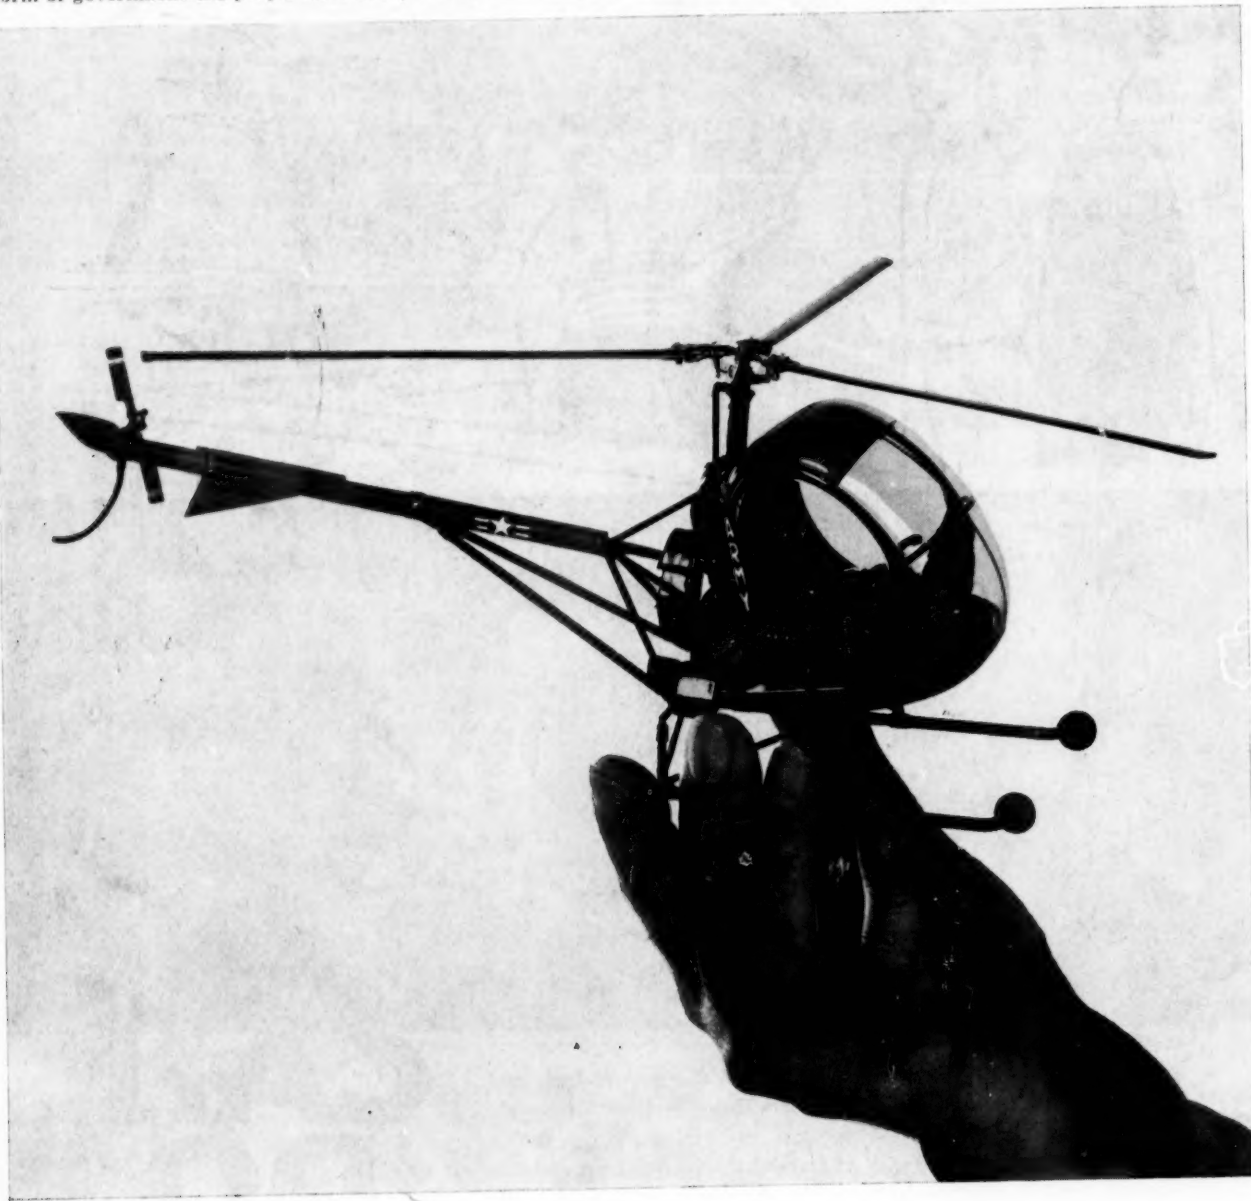

In accordance with testimony given before Congressional committees during hearings on the hump legislation, there will be no public listing of the names of the officers continued or non continued. The Navy said the report of the board being given special handling to insure that no unauthorized disclosures are made. The retirements occasioned by the report of the board will be administratively handled in precisely the same manner as normal voluntary retirements.

These precautions, the Navy said, "insure the personal privacy to which officers affected are entitled. The objective of this legislation is to obtain vacancies which would not normally occur under other provisions of law."

"It is by no means intended to be used as a 'plucking' instrument, nor should its implementation be regarded as reflecting adversely on the performance of the officers whose careers will be necessarily shortened by its use. To avoid such connotations, the continuation board will be handled with the utmost administrative care."
